Dweller with God before man was, before Created thing arose, and destined still Expression of th Eternal Mind and Will To be for evermore, Surviving in the freshness and the prime Of undecaying youth, Amid the shock of years, the sweep of Time; Imperishable truth! To thee what solemn offering shall we bring? To thee what holy celebration pay?--The frail, the fleeting creatures of a day, Whose generations, as the flowers of spring, Or withered leaves upon the tempest s wing, Are borne away. For thou wast with the Eternal when He dwelt in self-sufficiency of lonely power, Nor dreary want nor isolation felt, Nor needed for Himself Creation s hour. And thou wast present when His quickening breath Proclaimed the words divine, Let there be light! And the world woke, as from the mist of death, And stood dismantled...
