Excerpt: . . . ectives, processes, analytical methods, and conclusions on the health risks posed by dioxins compare with those of the World Health Organization; and (3) the extent to which the draft dioxin reassessment report reflects the views of independent peer review panels that reviewed key aspects of the reassessment. Also as agreed with your offices, our report provides information on the relevant scientific issues but does not render an opinion on the scientific merits of the reassessment. This report is based primarily on EPA's draft reassessment report dated October 2001, 3 which EPA circulated for internal agency review, and on the two most recent peer reviews of key segments of the draft reassessment in 2000. EPA derived its estimates of human dietary exposure to dioxins in the United States from (1) various studies that chemically analyzed samples of 10 food types, (2) toxicity estimates of the various levels of the individual 2 The National Academies consist of four organizations: the National Academy of Sciences, the National Academy of Engineering, the Institute of Medicine, and the National Research Council. 3 The September 2000 draft reassessment report is posted on EPA's Web page. While the October 2001 draft reflects a number of revisions to the September 2000 version on the Web page in response to public and peer review comments, the drafts are substantially the same. Results in Brief Page 3 GAO- 02- 515 Draft Reassessment of Dioxins dioxins in these foods, and (3) estimates of the quantities of these foods consumed by Americans. To develop more reliable national estimates of dietary exposure, EPA incorporated into its analysis some food studies that were designed to be nationally representative. However,...
